Collegiate Championships 2006

Andrea Vickers, Nashville FSC

After competing at the National Collegiate Championships for the two previous years, I felt as though I had a pretty good idea of what I was stepping into this year, but, as always, the competition is never quite the same. Of course, there are a few things that do stay the same, such as the relaxed atmosphere and the smiling faces of friendly competitors, but there are always a few surprises thrown into the mix. This year, one of the biggest changes was the fact that the Collegiate Championships was combined with a local competition, the Glacier Falls Summer Classic. I have to admit it was different seeing younger skaters at a collegiate competition, but it was encouraging having them there, especially those from my home rink. Along with combining the Collegiate Championships with a local competition for the first time, there was also another first for the competition, the incorporation of the new judging system. The usage of the new judging system was my favorite new addition to the competition because it allowed me to see specific details pertaining to my programs. Although there were a few different aspects to the competition this year, there is one detail that never changes; everyone there had the same thing on their mind, competition.

After a week of training in California, I was finally ready to take to the ice to skate my short program on Thursday, followed by my free skate on Friday. I was extremely delighted with both of my programs and felt as though they were my strongest skates of the year. I left the ice with a feeling of deep satisfaction, and was even more overwhelmed with joy when the results were posted. Even though aspects of the competition change each year, such as the competitors and location, I have been extremely blessed to have one thing remain the same. Each year, I have left the Collegiate Championships with an overwhelming feeling of joy, excitement, satisfaction, and relief, and I was happy to leave this year with those very same emotions. I am already looking forward to the next Collegiate Championships and the new experiences the competition will bring.
